TELLS WHY HE MENT TO THE SARATOGA CONVENTION.

Colonel Informs a Brooklyn Audience That He Would Have Written Tariff Plank Differently Two kinds of Talk Heard Abroad As to Corporations.

Col. Roosevelt asked a large audience in the Brooklyn Academy of Music last night to take a retrospective peep with him at the Saratoga convention; then when he had lifted the curtain just a little way he dropped it again with only this thought in the possession of his hear

If I d been as much in power up there." said the Colonel in his quizzical falsetto, "as some of the papers seemed to think at the time I was I would have written the tariff plank a little differently, but on the whole I think we came out of it

With that morsel of news went a little good natured effection upon the persenal bully time that had been enjoyed by the speaker

"I've been fortunate enough as a rule." he said. 'to enjoy every job that's been assigned to me. I heartily enjoyed being President and I have more than enjoyed myself since. I have always held that it is a citizen's duty to take an active part in the government of his country-so I went to the Saratoga convention " Here the Contributing Editor allowed himself to smile broadly. 'And aside from doing my duty up there I thoroughly enjoyed it too. I really believe I enjoyed it more than some of the other fellows."

Col. Roosevelt opened the new season of the Brooklyn Academy of Arts and Sciences with his address last night His topic was, "What It Means to be an American Besides telling in the abstract what it means to be an American the Colone's frequent use of the pronoun "we" indicated his inclusion of what it means to be an American President. There were thoughts on corporations, on bosses and upon mendacious newspapers as elements of American life

After Prof. Franklin W. Hooper, the president of the institute, had introduced oi Roosevelt as 'a man unsurpassed among all Americans" and the crowded house had cheered for several minutes the Colonel let drop those confidences anent Seratoga as a prejude. Then he spoke generally about what kind of a citizen he thought that man to be who came to listen to words of high purpose, applauded them because of the aschetic uplift that they gave him and then promptly went away and forgot *agains indulging in this special form of moral and incellectual intoxication which consists in intering or applicating instance leaves the moral and incered sentiments which are exalted but which they dont intend to dive up to.

He said that when he was in hurope last spring he heard two kinds of talk one pleasing and the other very displeasing. The first was that of the marin hard circumstances who believed that America was a golden ideal and a place where every man could work out his America was a golden ideal and a place where every man could work out his destiny unhindered. The second sentiment was that of universal pleasure among and in addition the saving grace of common sense."
